Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1400 on Monday 11 Oct 2021

UK Outlook for Saturday 16 Oct 2021 to Monday 25 Oct 2021:
To start this period, a band of thicker cloud extends from the northwest to southeast bringing the chance of drizzle. Outside of this area, dry and bright conditions across much of the UK with sunny spells developing. Temperatures mostly near average through the start of this period, although becoming colder in the north with rural areas seeing frost. High pressure and mostly dry conditions across the southeast at first while further spells of rain and stronger winds arrive across the northwest, spreading into southern parts too at times. These more unsettled conditions likely to become established more widely towards the latter part of this period. Temperatures likely remaining around or a little above average with night frosts possible in clearer interludes throughout.
